GCIT 200: War&Political Violence GlobSoc

This course introduces students to the study of political violence with a particular focus on war. Understanding the motivations behind acts of violence, societal and human costs of violence, types of violence used by state and nonstate actors and its physical, psychological and emotional effects on everyday people across different global societies allows us to learn more about the world we live in. This course explores historical and contemporary cases of gang violence, conflicts, terrorism, torture, civil wars, revolutions, riots and militarism from around the world.

GCIT 214: Global Environmental Citizenship

What are our obligations as global citizens for addressing environmental issues that threaten Earth's ecosystems and climate? The Environment and Global Citizenship examines the causes, development and current impacts of major environmental problems and considers the possibilities and challenges of addressing them through global cooperation and technological innovation. Students will apply concepts of equity and environmental justice as they analyze the international dynamics responsible for the unequal distribution of responsibility and suffering related to environmental degradation around the world. This course can be counted towards the Environmental Humanities concentration.

GCIT 215: Global Immigration

In this course, students will examine theories of, and debates surrounding, global immigration – looking at the similarities and differences in its processes, causes, and outcomes, as well as the contrasting responses that immigrants encounter in their host nations. Topics will include the reasons why people migrate and how immigration changes countries, institutions, communities, and the immigrants themselves. Students will draw from material learned in other Hallmarks classes – including critical reading, writing, and historical skills, as well as knowledge of social inequalities and challenges – to think holistically about global immigration.

GCIT 216: Politics of Global Supply Chains

Businesses are increasingly sourcing, producing, or supplying both intermediate and final goods across various global locations. These business practices, which coincided with tremendous increases in the globalization of trade and investments in the last few decades, have created a complex network known as global supply chains. This course surveys the development of these global supply chains within the context of local and international power dynamics. The course explores the political economy of these global production and distribution networks while examining the political, cultural, and socio-economic outcomes of these networks. This course can be counted towards the Design Humanities certification.

GCIT 217: Global Health

This course surveys the history, current practices, and future of global health. Students will explore the interconnections between health, economics, policy, and power at institutional and individual levels, and consider the methods used to evaluate, protect and promote global health. Topics such as cancer, HIV/AIDS, obesity, lead poisoning, mental disorders, and tobacco use will be used to illustrate the principles and dilemmas of global health. The course also examines how local, national, and international factors, including public health agencies, international agreements and institutions, and non-governmental funders influence global health. This course can be counted towards the Health Humanities certification

Schedule Type: Hybrid, Lecture, On-LineGCIT 218: Capitalism & Socialism in World

As competing economic systems and theories, capitalism and socialism have shaped the modern age since at least the Industrial Revolution, transforming the world and offering radically different visions for how to achieve ideals such as social equality, prosperity, happiness, freedom, democracy, and human rights. Often thought of as opposites, in practice capitalism and socialism have long been intertwined, and every nation in the world today incorporates some of the logic of each. This course invites students to explore how these economic ideas, in both their radical and mundane forms, have shaped societies through their intersection with topics such as wealth, poverty, labor, exploitation, politics, technology, religion, healthcare, education, gender equality, social welfare, colonization, racism, slavery, and international relations.
